

RSPO SPOTLIGHT ON THE UK

How can British companies achieve sustainability in palm oil?

Powering progress through sustainable palm oil

Doing business without harming people or the planet is not without challenges. Yet a growing number of companies are realising that sustainability is the only way forward. From net-zero pledges to traceable supply chains, businesses are engaging to take meaningful and measurable action.

In 2004, the Roundtable on Sustainable Palm Oil (RSPO) was established to promote the production and use of sustainable palm oil. The RSPO Standards have been established to promote the sustainable production of palm oil with respect for the environment, human rights and the wellbeing and inclusion of smallholders. These standards help British companies to progress towards meeting their sustainability commitments and targets.

In The United Kingdom, conscious consumerism and a mature debate on sustainable palm oil make RSPO membership an essential step for any business aiming to be part of the sustainability conversation.

“We are proud to be members of the RSPO to demonstrate that all of the palm oil used in our products is sustainable. RSPO certification also helps to drive our performance in a number of other benchmarks including CPD Forests and the WWF Palm Oil Buyers Scorecard.”

Supply Chain Certification is designed to ensure chain of custody, safeguard trade and traceability, and have it independently certified by a third party. It is a prerequisite for companies that want to make claims about the presence of certified materials along the supply chain, so that these claims can be trusted by the company’s clients, customers and other stakeholders. The UK holds a strong second position with 340 certified companies and 569 facilities, showcasing the added value of certification for industry players and consumers alike.

Supply Chain Certification (SCC) trends in the UK

SCC Certifications in the UK have been steady since 2021 – with both companies and facilities showing strong growth through 2024.

Top 10 countries with Trademark Licences

Trademark Licences are necessary for corporate or product-related communications. With 170 licences obtained, the UK holds the second highest place in the chart.

Growth in RSPo Trademark License Holders in the UK

This chart shows the steady growth of RSPo Trademark Licence Holders in the UK from 2018 to 2024. This trend demonstrates the increasing commitment among British companies to sustainable palm oil practices.

READY TO COMMIT TO A BIGGER CAUSE?

Whether your company produces, trades, distributes or sells products containing palm (kernel) oil and/or derivatives, it is essential that you only buy from RSPo Certified sustainable sources.

RSPo will support you in drafting and implementing procurement policies, provide pre-competitive spaces for you to learn about the issue, and help tell your sustainability story publicly and transparently.

RSPo Members with an RSPo Trademark Licence gain additional opportunities for communications online, business-to-business (B2B), and business-to-consumer (B2C).
